WEATHER KEY POINTS

09/16/21 - 09/22/21

Thursday-Wednesday

- Dry conditions and breezy winds will lead to elevated to locally critical fire weather concerns Thursday, including in the northern mountains and across the southern California mountains, deserts, and interior valleys.
 - A period of stronger winds appears increasingly more likely across the northern and central Sierra, Modoc Plateau, and southern Cascades Friday through Sunday, which could increase fire weather concerns.
 - A round of gusty offshore winds is possible early next week, bringing more areas of critical fire weather concerns.
- Dry weather is expected for the state through much of the forecast period.
 - Primarily beneficial precipitation will return to portions of northern California for the weekend.
 - Potential for mudslides or debris flows around some recent burn scars in far northern California.
- Areas of thick wildfire smoke will persist across far northern California and the southern Sierra through at least late this week.
